U.S. FEARS POLITICAL COMPLICATIONS OF WAR DEBT CONCESSION

AMERICA'S $50,000,000 LOAN TO CHINA

'The Times' Sees Increase Of Restiveness.

EFFECT ON BRITISH HOLDERS OF CHINESE BONDS

London, To-day.
The outcome of the $50,000,000 loan reported to have been made to China by American interests to finance the purchase of wheat and cotton, according to 'The Times,' will be to increase the restiveness of British holders of Chinese bonds, who must regard the loan as an aggravation.

The case against debtors, is that the Chinese national revenue should be allocated to the service of new loans, while their own claims continue to be ignored.

The organised action taken by the bondholders of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway, in defence of their rights, is a case in point.

That this action has been initiated by a large body of local investors in this Chinese undertaking is more significant, as they have means that are obviously not open to bondholders resident outside China of informing themselves upon the administration of the Railway on which their bonds are secured.

Their charge of extravagance, therefore, carries weight. — Reuter.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation authorized the loan on June 3.

Four-fifths of the money is to be used for cotton and one-fifth for wheat, in the open markets of the United States and the purchases must be shipped in American ships unless these are not available.

The loan runs for three years at five per cent. interest.

Mr. T. V. Soong, Chinese Finance Minister, who is now in England for the World Economic Conference, signed the contract during his stay in Washington.

NEW GOVERNOR OF PHILIPPINES ARRIVES HERE

Mr. Murphy Brings An Economic Adviser.

SUCCESSFUL TERM AS MAYOR OF DETROIT

Mr. Frank Murphy, the new Governor General of the Philippines, and former Mayor of Detroit, arrived in the colony to-day on board the President Coolidge.

Governor Murphy, Mr. Mills and the secretary, Mr. Norman Hill, former Detroit newspaperman, are due to arrive at Manila on June 15.

The youngest chief executive in the Islands' history, Governor Murphy already has broken precedent for the appointment Mr. Joseph Mills, general manager of the Detroit street railways, to accompany him to Manila as economic adviser and general administrator of the government-owned business enterprises in the Philippines.

PART PAYMENT CONSIDERED BY MR. ROOSEVELT

Washington Studies
Legal Aspect.

LAUSANNE PACT MAY BE INVOLVED

Washington, To-day.
President Roosevelt's assistants are studying the legality of any part payment of war debts and the question of whether the acceptance of a part payment will constitute tacit approval for the non-payment of the balance.

The 'Baltimore Sun' believes that any 10 per cent. offer might create political complications, since it will be based on the Lausanne Pact. — Reuter.

Cabinet Meets In London.

SIR JOHN SIMON CALLED BACK URGENTLY.

London, To-day.

The Foreign Secretary, Sir John Simon, who has been spending a holiday at Le Touquet, and who was due to return here, to-day, was urgently summoned to London by air yesterday afternoon for a meeting with the Premier, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Neville Chamberlain and the President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Walter Runciman.

The meeting, which lasted for an hour, was held to denote the developments of the war debt discussion with Washington. — Reuter.

15 Nations May Default.

FIVE COUNTRIES DEFINITELY
UNABLE TO PAY.

London.

A United Press survey indicated that if both Britain and France default their war debt instalments, due the United States June 15, there is every likelihood that the 13 remaining European debtors will join in a general default.

Five countries already have definitely decided not to meet the June payments as due — Hungary, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, Austria and Greece.

It was also expected that Poland, Belgium, Estonia and Czechoslovakia would not be willing to pay, regardless of the action of the two major powers.

France defaulted her payment of last December and is still uncertain whether to pay, because the United States has indicated unwillingness to discuss debt revision of war debts with countries in default. — U.P.

FIVE-DAY WEEK IN AMERICA.

U.S. Naval Employees.

Washington.

Secretary of Navy Claude Swanson has ordered that all naval and marine corps employees be placed on a five-day week basis, effective June 25.

Mr. Swanson explained that the order was due to the necessity of economy, and designed to spread work and avoid discharges as far as practicable.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

ALL DELEGATIONS NOW
IN LONDON

AMERICA TO ADVANCE SILVER AND TARIFF PROPOSALS

LONDON, TO-DAY.

THE WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE WILL BE OFFICIALLY OPENED BY HIS MAJESTY THE KING AT 3 P.M. TO-DAY. REPRESENTATIVES OF 66 NATIONS WILL GATHER AT THE NEW ROYAL GEOLOGICAL MUSEUM, SOUTH KENSINGTON, FOR THE CEREMONY, WHICH WILL BE BRIEF.

His Majesty's speech, which will last for seven minutes, will be followed by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's Presidential address.

Officials of six Embassies were among the Throngs which awaited a single train at Victoria Station last night. The train brought the French Premier, M. Daladier, and the delegates of Italy, Czechoslovakia headed by Dr. Benes, Rumania, Portugal and Yugoslavia, winding up a day of almost continuous arrivals, of foreign delegates for the Conference.

U.S. SILVER PLAN

Use In Central Bank
Reserves.

UNDERSTANDING WITH THE POWERS

London.

American delegates to the World Economic Conference have revealed that President Roosevelt had reached an informal accord with some of the foreign statesmen who recently visited the White House with respect to the use of silver in central bank reserves.

This informal and as yet unbinding accord will be presented for discussion at the World Economic Conference and Senator Key Pittman said he hoped that one of the results of the understanding, if officially adopted, would be a world ratio of silver to gold. The present understanding does not attempt to fix a ratio.

The object of the understanding is to economise the use of gold and, under its provisions, the United States would back its money issues with 25 per cent. of gold and five per cent. silver. Other nations would adopt similar provisions with whatever slight variations would be required.

The central banks of the various nations would, under the plan mentioned above, be able to stabilise the price of silver. There would still be a varying market price for silver but it would be kept within definite limits by the operations of the silver banks.

When silver prices are low, the banks will buy to keep the silver reserves at an actual five per cent. of their gold value in relation to the nation's money issues.

When silver prices are too high, the central banks will sell. All operations will tend to prevent a wide variation.

This arrangement would provide a greater use of silver and would result in a better price. Senator Pittman said that it would probably bring about a silver price that would make silver mining profitable. He was not so sure, however, that a ratio would be adopted.

The plan is first to stabilise silver and bring the price up to a 'fair level,' Senator Pittman said. 'I can see the possibility of an agreement on a world ratio but that is not assured yet.'

Throughout the week-end the influx of foreign delegations continued, and the West End hotels, where most of the representatives are staying, presented a gay scene. Flags of many nations are being flown throughout the city, and Victoria Station yesterday hummed with unusual activity as crowds gathered to see the arrival of the foreign visitors.

The first few days of the Conference will be occupied with the speeches of the leaders of the delegations who will put forward their schemes for the restoration of world trade.

10 Per Cent. Cut In Tariffs.

AMERICAN PROPOSAL FOR CONFERENCE.

It was indicated among the American delegates and experts to the World Economic Conference that a flat 10 per cent. world-wide tariff cut may be the first major point of attack on depression.

The American delegation is ready to support such a proposal, depending on the form of the authority which congress will give President Franklin D. Roosevelt to enter into tariff agreements.

Removal of the high tariff barriers impeding world trade is one of the prime objectives of the American delegates, to which they expect to contribute some practical gesture.

Such a move from the United States would be considered logical, as many consider the present world-wide strangling of trade by tariff barriers dates from the Hawley-Smoot tariff of 1930.

Motor Car.

DR. RINTITEN'S ESCAPE

Vienna, To-day.

An attempt was made at midnight, last night, to assassinate Dr. Ibr Rintiten, Local Governor of Styria, and ex-Minister of Education for Austria.

Dr. Rintiten was motoring from Bruck an der Mur to Graz when his car ran over a plank covering a tube filled with dynamite.

A terrific explosion followed, but the speed of the car carried it out of danger. — Reuter.

Styria, which has an area 6,820 square miles and a population of 1,025,476, is situated between Upper and Lower Austria. The country is almost entirely mountainous, the chief occupation being mining.

Lisbon, To-day.

General Antonio Oscar de Fragozo Carmona, President of Portugal, had a narrow escape from death yesterday, while he, together with Diplomats and Government members, was watching a stunt flying competition.

One plane executing a series of daring loops, got out of control owing to a strong wind and nose-dived.

The plane crashed 10 yards from where the President was standing, and a general panic ensued.

President Carmona alone remained calm and only remarked, 'Please God he is safe.'

The airman was severely injured.

WORKMAN CRUELLY BEATEN TO DEATH

Delegates Dragged From Beds

Munich, To-day.

A young workman was cruelly beaten to death outside the Cathedral here yesterday by Nazi 'Brown Shirts,' following a Nazi raid, on a Catholic Congress of apprentices and journeymen.

Many scenes of violence were witnessed, and the police intervention was futile against onslaughts of the organised force of 'Brown Shirts.'

The raid took place with remarkable suddenness, and the Congress was quickly broken up by the Nazis, who, it is alleged, were incensed at the sight of the delegate wearing uniforms.

Thousands of the delegates, including Vice-Chancellor Von Papen, hastily left the building, but many were roughly handled before they could get away.

After the building had been cleared, the Nazis followed up their vicious attack in the streets, while a number of delegates were dragged from their beds. The outburst was even directed against the Catholic priests, many of whom were prevented from holding their services. The Archbishop of Munich, who was to have said Mass for the delegation, was forced to cancel the service. — Reuter.

Scores as cabled by Reuter: — J. Satoh (Japan) beat Jaenicke 6-2, 6-2, 6-2.

Von Cramm (Germany) beat R. Nunoi 3-6, 6-2, 7-5, 6-7, 3-6.

REMEMBER
teeth are living parts of your body. They may be ill through lack of the proper nourishment—Calcium.

—but now
you can

Cure your teeth from within—

KALZANA, the Calcium food, is the new idea in the care of the teeth. For many years people thought that a clean tooth could not decay. Yet however carefully we cleaned them they always did decay. For your teeth are living organs of the body; they may be weak, they may be ill and underfed. Through microscopic canals they get their food [calcium] from the blood.

Weak teeth give continuous trouble. By taking Kalzana, the calcium food, you can make your teeth strong and white and prevent decay.

A well-known dental surgeon writes:
"Kalzana makes the teeth strong and hard and so stops tooth decay. I have often seen extraordinary results."

Keep your teeth clean with a dentifrice, but make them strong with Kalzana. Only then will you be really free from decay. Kalzana will make your teeth hard and healthy. Moreover, Kalzana strengthens the whole constitution and gives your whole body increased powers of resistance.

On Argumentative Children

Sensible Answers Often Demanded

The Impressionable Age

It is a terrible strain to be ten, twelve hours a day with a child who challenges everything you say or do, but there are two types of argumentative children, the one to be encouraged and the other discouraged tactfully. The "right" type of arguer is the child whose growing mind makes him ask "why" on every conceivable occasion. To stop him with "Because I say so" is a great mistake; it may make him slack and uninterested in time. Whenever he asks one of his intelligent questions: "Why does it get dark?" "Why is Grand-ma's hair grey, or, as a child said to me the other day in the garden, "Why are worms?" the answering should be a delight to a mother.

Facing Realities
The brain of a small child is growing rapidly; he is taking in impressions every moment and the world to him is a fascinating place full of wonders and mysteries. If you don't satisfy his desire for information, either he will retire into his shell and become stupid, or else live in a world of phantasy from which it may be very difficult to awaken him when he grows older and must face realities.

At the same time, he must learn that there is a time to ask questions and a time not to do it, and that if mother is talking to a friend, or reading, or very busy, he must wait. There is nothing more annoying than to be repeatedly interrupted by a child when one is wanting to talk, and if such a child is not checked he will become almost unbearable in company. It isn't only that he wants to "know," sometimes, remember that he likes your attention and will try to draw it from someone else if he can.

Tell the Truth
Then there is the problem of how to answer his questions and arguments, and the only thing is to tell him the truth, no matter what the question. If you don't, he will find out some day, and will never trust you again. Much of the lack of real confidence between parents and children comes from parents having told them some cock-and-bull tale when they asked embarrassing questions.

The truth cannot hurt a child, although if it is a painful truth it could be toned down, of course. If, for instance, there is anything sordid in the family, that might be hidden. If Uncle Harry has run away with someone, and Bill wants to know where he is and why Auntie is so miserable, say quite frankly that uncle has behaved very badly and you don't want to think about him any more. But if Daddy has lost a lot of money, and Billy wants to know why he can't have something he covets, tell him quite honestly that Daddy is hard-up but that he will be well-off again soon. There is nothing sordid in being hard-up, though there may be something very sordid in running away from one's family! And if he asks a question that you can't answer, tell him so frankly, and say, "I'll find out and tell you." He will respect you none the less for not knowing everything, but he won't respect you if you put him off with vague explanations.

"Mother Knows Best"
The "why-er" who must be discouraged is the child who says, "Why must I have my dinner?" "Why must I go to bed?" and who argues when told to do anything. Explain to this child, once and for all, that certain rules have to be obeyed, because you are older than he is and you know better what things have to be done quickly, because there are so many nice things to do, and fussing about silly things stops one from doing them.

This is not bribery. It is showing him the law of cause and effect teaching him that prompt obedience brings pleasant consequences. At the same time, show him that disobedience brings punishment. If he is allowed to be naughty, how will he ever fit into any human environment

RELIEVING WHITE

A white crepe evening gown has shoulders edged with a line of blue kingfisher feathers, a dull purple tatin jersey gown designed with a low cut back decolletage has two tufts of pale yellow feathers at its base, while a black crepe dinner gown has a decolletage edged with bright flame coloured feathers.

FEATHERED HATS

HATS are using feathers which are more costly than the trims that have appeared in many seasons. Birds of paradise, sprays of osprey and swirls of lacquered ostrich feathers appear on a number of toques for formal afternoon wear, while little feather novelties appear on many street models.

FOR REMOVING STAINS

STAINS on old wood floors may be removed by a solution of 1 teaspoon of oxalic acid in one cup of hot water. The liquid is poisonous. It should be allowed to stand on the wood overnight. Then all traces of the acid must be removed.

BRIDGE NOTES

VANDERBILT CLUB CONVENTION

While an initial bid of One Club may be made on the minimum holding of three quick tricks it does not follow that it should always be called. Mr. Vanderbilt states that frequently the best results are obtained by passing hands with minimum opening requirements. No hard and fast rule is laid down, the decision whether to pass or to open depending primarily upon whether the hand pattern is defensive or offensive. The characteristics of the other players may also be taken into consideration. If they are prone to open on weak hands you can safely afford to pass relatively strong ones occasionally. This advice, it should be noted, is diametrically opposed to that of the "natural" and direct bidders who recommend opening on minimum holdings, some advocating a standard so low as one and a half quick tricks.

In spite of the fact that Mr. Vanderbilt advises a pass on some hands containing three quick tricks he allows a bid of One Club in certain conditions on hands containing only two and a half quick tricks. Holding S.—K. Q. 7. T.—A. Q. J. D.—K. J. 10. C.—7. 5. 4. 2. He advises a bid of One Club followed by One No Trump if partner makes a negative response. Technically on his valuation this hand is not a Club bid. His Quick Trick table is very simple—A. or K. Q. of the same suit or two guarded Kings—1 Quick Trick, A. K. of the same suit—2 Quick Tricks. He makes a distinction between Quick Tricks and High Card Tricks, but he insists that the shaded Club bid never should be made unless, as in this hand, all of the following conditions exist:—(a) the hand is too strong to pass; (b) no other bid is possible; (c) the hand has as good distributed strength as the minimum legitimate Club bid. These distinctions appear somewhat arbitrary and I see no objection even on his own principles to opening with One No Trump instead of One Club.

Similarly, Mr. Vanderbilt admits shaded responses by partner. The minimum requirement for a positive response—i.e., a response other than One Diamond—is the possession of two quick-tricks. Yet after a bid of One Club by Z. Y. holding S.—A. Q. 5. 3. H.—K. J. 10. 5. 4. D.—Q. J. 9. C.—6, should respond affirmatively with One Heart although he holds on the count only one and a half quick tricks. "To respond negatively," writes Mr. Vanderbilt, "with such a hand would be to convey false information." It will be seen that there are many subtleties and refinements to be considered if you play correctly the system of the author.

All will agree that a player should not become an automaton bound hand and foot by the rules of any system or convention he may play. But if considerable latitude is allowed in the application of a system it may well fall of its purpose. Some players in London use the Vanderbilt One Club to show three quick tricks in conjunction with the Two Club bid to indicate five quick tricks or more irrespective of Club holding. But this is no part of the Vanderbilt design. On his system the bid of Two Clubs definitely means a biddable Club suit and has no artificial significance. Nor has any initial bid of Two of a suit. In fact, on his principles, the Two bid is ambiguous. It is not forcing and may be made on a long suit with only one quick in the hand. In dealing with bids of Three of a suit, Mr. Vanderbilt, while propounding an arbitrary standard, makes a distinction between minor and major suits. He recommends a bid of Three in a minor on a six or seven solid suit—a suit headed by A. K. Q. J. or A. K. Q. in which there are no possible losers. This bid of Three in a minor is a direct invitation to partner to call Three No Trumps, if he holds guards, however weak, in the other suits. An initial bid of Three in a major, however, is not a No Trump invitation. It invites a raise to game on partner's side strength but not in No Trumps. The major suit, therefore, need not be solid, but the caller should hold seven probable tricks provided he secures the contract. But the Three bid indicates little or no defensive value. In advocating this use Mr. Vanderbilt opposes the theories of Mr. Culbertson and Mr. Hal Sims. Mr. Sims would reserve the bid of Three for what he calls "rock-crushing" hands where game is guaranteed and slam probable. He would never shade the requirements and he regards his Three call as the most devastating, unerring bid yet devised in Contract Bridge.

Mr. Culbertson does not recommend minor suit Three bids at all, and will permit opening major suit bids of Three only when the hand contains eight playing tricks including one and a half or more honour tricks in side suits. English procedure favours the Vanderbilt Three as against Sims and Culbertson. In fact, in my experience, the Three bid on pre-emptive lines is one of the most valuable offensive calls at Contract. To limit it as Sims and Culbertson do to certain game or almost game hands is to deprive oneself of a formidable weapon. It can be employed most advantageously—as a shut-out bid. Always it embarrasses the opponents, while it does not deceive the partner unless he is convention-bound. It is therefore on certain types of hands the ideal bid when holding offensive and little defensive strength.

As for original game bids in a suit, at love score they should mean eight to nine reasonably certain tricks in a major and nine to ten in a minor. Such hands occur so seldom that little need be said about them. Only when obviously it is desirable or necessary to try to shut out an adversary's bid need they be called to their full strength initially. They are pre-emptive bids and not slam suggestions. Partner should not assist or overbid unless he has two or three Aces.

WOMAN EXPLORER'S ADVENTURES.

Through Jungle To Andes Range.

London.

Mrs. Gressy-Marcks, who wrote "Up the Amazon and Over the Andes," spends nine out of every 12 months in some isolated corner of the world far away from her English home. For the past 14 years she has gone exploring alone.

This expedition led her through the steaming South American jungle and over the Andes to the ruins of Machu-Pichu. She finally reached her objective after a climb of 17,000 feet through a region of blizzards and perpetual snow.

This daring explorer—she is fair, feminine and almost delicate in appearance—has been on many hazardous journeys. She has trekked through Africa from Cairo to Cape Town. She has driven a team of huskies in Alaska and travelled by camel-caravan in the Sahara.—Reuter.

"SCARFACE"—KING'S THEATRE.

Racketeering in all its ramifications, particularly that branch which centers its activities in the illicit liquor traffic, is forcibly pictured in "Scarface," the Howard Hughes epic which is now showing at the King's Theatre.

"Scarface" tells of the rise and fall of Tony Camonte, and the leading role is played by Paul Muni, famous character actor; Ann Dvorak, a new leading woman, is on the cast, and William Boyd, Karen Morley and other players of importance.

George Raft, who resembles the late Rudolph Valentino, has tried for years to obtain parts in pictures which might win him recognition. His portrayal of the dapper gunman in "Scarface" won him instant favor with Hollywood producers, and lavish praise from critics and the public.

"MAKE ME A STAR"—QUEEN'S THEATRE.

"Make Me a Star," now showing at the Queen's Theatre, is a dramatic comedy. A comedy at which you laugh with tears in your eyes. There is a heart-break in this nonsense—the ambition of a boy holds sacred, those about him laugh at it. It's the supreme proof of story, acting and directorial genius—for its deep roars follow each lump in the throat.

"Make me a Star," is a story of Hollywood. Stuart Erwin, plays the leading role in this picture, assisted by Joan Blondell, Zasu Pitts and Ben Turpin.

Real life, neither distorted nor misinterpreted, forms the background of this extraordinary picture. The author (Fannie Hurst) has groped through the millions of New York and picked out a Jewish family from the Ghetto round which the film rotates.

The tragedy, the drama and the humour of life is represented as it has seldom been before. The acting is remarkably good, genuine and sincere, outstanding are Gregory Ratoff as the father, Anna Appel as the mother, and Ricardo Cortez as the great surgeon.

Unusual care has been devoted to details, "Symphony of Six Million" is rich in human understanding and moving in its fine emotionalism.

"YES, MR. BROWN"—MAJESTIC THEATRE.

It is as director and star that Jack Buchanan is presented in "Yes, Mr. Brown," the delightful comedy, with music, that is now being shown at the Majestic Theatre.

The story is amusing, and concerns the efforts of Jack Buchanan, as manager of a top shop in Vienna, to entertain his American principal, who is visiting the Vienna branch. Jack Buchanan hopes to bring off a partnership, and to that end every member of his staff, including his wife, is instructed to do his utmost to make Mr. Brown's visit a pleasurable one.

LESSON SERMON.

First Church of Christ, Scientist—Hong Kong.

"God the preserver of man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which was read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 11.

The Golden Text was: "For the Lord loveth judgment and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever." Ps. 37: 28).

Among the citations, which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth." He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; he that keepeth thee will not slumber; the Lord is thy keeper; the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; he shall preserve thy soul. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and even for evermore." (Ps. 121: 1-3).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The history of Christianity furnishes sublime proofs of the supporting influence and protecting power bestowed on man, by his heavenly Father, omnipotent Mind, who gives man faith and understanding whereby to defend himself not only from temptation, but from bodily suffering." (p. 387).

CHINESE POLITICS
PUZZLEA Clear And Well-
Balanced Review.

"TINDER-BOX OF ASIA"

The Tinder Box of Asia by G. S. Sokolsky (Allen & Unwin 10/6 net.)

Chinese politics are a puzzle, and it is practically impossible for anyone in Europe or even in China to know what is happening between the Amur and the Si Kiang. Newspaper reports and magazine articles, though interesting and often suggestive, do not help greatly to elucidate matters and most of the books on China's chaos are either prejudiced or written by authors whose knowledge is superficial. Mr. Sokolsky, who has lived for years in China and worked for American, Russian, Chinese, Japanese and English newspapers, makes a heroic attempt to illumine what is dark, and in the "Tinder Box of Asia" gives us an imposing array of facts concerning the deeds and aspirations of Chinese generals and politicians since the fall of the Manchu Dynasty.

After describing Chinese family life—how China is a mighty agglomeration of families, grains of sand rather than a solid mass of cement—the clash between Communism and Nationalism, how time and again since the Boxer Rising China has been saved from humiliation only by the jealousies and mutual mistrust of the Great Powers, our author goes on to tell how the provinces of Mongolia, Turkestan, Tibet and Manchuria have slipped from Chinese suzerainty. In this, perhaps the best written part of the book, we were surprised to learn that Tibet is now a British Protectorate. Such a statement makes us somewhat sceptical regarding other statements and conclusions in this book.

Nevertheless the book is a clearly written and fairly well balanced survey of the trials of a mighty nation which has come to the parting of the ways, a nation whose very size and diversity make her

Humour And Pathos In A Novel About Jews

"Jacob Across Jabbok." By Gert-rude and M. J. Landa. (Dennis Archer, 7s. 6d.)

This book is opportune. The Jews are being shot at, literally and figuratively, in many parts of Europe; and to those of us who would like to know how the Jews feel about it all this book may well supply an answer.

Not that its intention is propaganda. Our instruction is by inference. The theme of the novel is the attitude of two Jewish families to the alien civilisation of England. The Brocklowitzs, in the West End, become the Brocklows and treat their Jewish origin as a stigma that must be eradicated. The Feldmans, in the East End, cling tenaciously to Jewry.

The strands of the two families cross when young Feldman, through intellectual brilliance, and young Brocklow, through his father's chequebook, meet at Cambridge; and Brocklow's love for Feldman's sister ends his parents' dream that the third generation would complete the climb from gutter-trading to a marriage into Debut.

The Feldman twins, slashing their way from school to university, are an attractive pair; and young Brocklow, feeling his blood turn back to his origins and contemptuous of his parents' prudent sterility, is a character seen in the round.

The book has humour and pa-travels agonising and long. The author who seems to have mixed with many of the "Big Guns," including our 1925 friend, Borodin, seems to regard Chiang Kai Shek as the most hopeful, or, may we say, least hopeless solution to the present desperate situation, but very wisely he, the author, refrains from forecasting.

"The Tinder Box of Asia" presents China's position in an able and unbiassed way, and we recommend it to anyone who takes more than a passing interest in China.

thos; its drama is implemented by the clash of human beings.

Impenched! By Bruce. Graeme (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.)

Fulke Collingwood, clerk, loved a Cabinet Minister's daughter; and when he asked her hand in marriage the Minister picked him up, hurled him through the front door, and thought that that was that.

But Fulke, having voyaged round the world to recruit his manhood, came back and took the leadership of a secret party, whose members were tired of constitutional old codgers, drilled with dummy rifles, and advocated a Fascist march on London. Their slogan was simple: "Britain first, the Empire second—and the rest of the world to hell."

Fulke was impeached. It is many years since anyone was impeached in England; and Mr. Graeme, whose legal knowledge is impeccable, has given us the trial in full.

I should not have thought that a detailed account of an appearance before the bar of the Lords, with the Commons as prosecutors, could be made so dramatic. But it is intensely dramatic. It is a grand idea for a book and Mr. Graeme has squeezed out every ounce of effect. The thing goes breathlessly from beginning to end; and Fulke, I am glad to say, married the Foreign Secretary's daughter.

The Stalking, Horse. By Rafael Sabatini. (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.)

This is another novel of that terribly over-written time when the Jacobites were plotting for the return of the Stuarts.

Nothing but a supremely good novel could bring back any enthusiasm for "The King across the water," the "Glen o' weeping," the peridy of the Campbells and the splendour of the MacDonalds. And Mr. Sabatini is not a supremely good novelist.

In this present book he shows all his old dexterity with situation, cleverness in the tying of knots and boldness in their unravelling; but his men and women are stocks and stones without breath or brain. Quick Work. By Edgar Holt. (Eldon Press, 7s. 6d.)

A girl who wins five thousand pounds on a horse and proceeds to finance a play in which she is due to appear is as good a story as any press agent can reasonably hope to discover," says Mr. Holt.

It certainly is; and Mr. Holt has made good use of the plot which he has thus chosen to outline for himself.

This is his first novel. It is brisk and competent, full of a modern self-reliant cheekiness. It develops a Wodehouse situation without the Wodehouse genius for apt asininity. But that may come.

English Leaves. By E. V. Lucas. (Methuen, 6s.)

These are Mr. Lucas's musings on odds and ends of English life: cricket and cathedrals, and all that sort of thing.

He is very good at being mellow. His mood is so richly autumnal that I imagine his end will be burial by robins, with red and yellow leaves for winding sheet.

But may that be deferred for a long time, and may he go on, between now and then, in unimpeded mist and mellow fruitfulness.

Line Drawings for Reproduction. By Ashley. (Studio, 7s. 6d.)

This is one of the Studio series of books on "How to do it."

"Ashley," who is Mr. Ashley Havinden, has written primarily for those who hope to make a livelihood out of commercial drawing; but no one will find the book uninteresting who has the customary human curiosity about how another man does his job.

It is profusely illustrated with drawings by masters of the black-and-white medium. Mr. Havinden's remarks on a drawing by Low—on its "simplicity evolved through complex thought and experiment"—make an opportune reply to those who have lately been overcome by some doubt concerning Low. It is a doubt unshared by those who know "how to do it."

COMPLETE LIFE OF "MOWGLI"

The complete life of Mowgli, as told by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, has not, so far, been presented in a single volume. This is now to be done by Macmillans and we shall have "All the Mowgli Stories" in the autumn.

Mr. Stuart Treadwell, whose animal pictures are well known, has done illustrations for the volume.

COULD NOT ENJOY
HIS SUCCESS.
Death Of Novelist Who Wrote "Red Ike."

Mr. Jonathan M. Denwood, the Cumberland novelist and poet, and author of "Red Ike," has died at the age of 63. But success came too late for him. By the time his literary fame was established and his income was such that he could afford medical treatment he was ill beyond medical aid.

"Red Ike" was chosen in June, 1931, by the Book Society as the best book of the month and within three months 30,000 copies of it were sold. It had been rejected by nine publishing firms.

His bitterness at his late success was expressed in a letter he wrote to a literary group in London. He said "I am now so ill that I cannot enjoy the luck or success that has come so suddenly. Fate has a way of making sport of us all and success is ashes in the mouth."

Mr. Denwood was a working tailor who was a poacher by night. "Red Ike" is the life story of his father.

LACK OF AN INDEX IN "CHAMBERLAIN"

Sir Fabian Ware, writing in The Nineteenth Century of J. L. Garvin's "Chamberlain," complains of its lack of an index.

"To a reviewer," he says, "the omission is frankly unpardonable; after the trouble it has caused me, and the evasions by means of generalizations it has forced on me, I am inclined to regard it as a discourtesy."

Spying Becoming A Dead LetterExciting Incidents In
"Traitors Within."

MUCH LEFT UNSAID

There is no doubt that the Official Secrets Acts must spoil many a good story.

"Traitors Within" (Hurst and Blackett, 18/-) by ex-Detective Inspector Herbert T. Fitch, for instance, would be positively a literary earthquake—were it not for the existence of the Official Secrets Acts.

This biography of a remarkable Scotland Yard sleuth bristles with exciting incident; but time after time we feel that the author pulls himself up—clamping tight those discreet lips as the whisper of the Official Secrets Acts warns him not to explain that very thing which we should so much like to know.

One chapter head informs us—"I am promised the Iron Cross; a bitter failure"—but inside that chapter I defy you to elucidate those words. Here, I imagine, the Official Secrets Acts registered at the proof-reading stage.

His memoirs are divided up under Anarchism, Espionage and Reflections.

Lenin and Trotsky were two of the pre-war personalities upon whom the authors had to keep a law-abiding eye. He did not think much of either of them. Disguised as a waiter, he was cursed by Lenin in a public house in Islington. "Clumsy fool!" hissed Lenin as Mr. Fitch "accidentally" knocked some of the future Red Dictator's papers on to the floor. He took one away—under his napkin.

Arcos Raid Facts.

We read with increasing astonishment of the audacity and ingenuity of Mr. Fitch and his colleagues in thwarting the plans of all kinds of "bad men." We hear that the Zinovieff letter was genuine. We learn the facts of the dramatic Arcos raid.

Ku Klux Klan men come to England. That is another bomb exploded in our faces by this discreetly sensational writer.

Mr. Fitch lets himself go perhaps a trifle too energetically on the subject of murder. "If the death penalty were removed tomorrow," he writes, "London would be full of heavily-armed gangsters a week later, and probably half the Cabinet would be lying dead in the streets."

Referring to the case of the "Officer in the Tower," it is interesting to read that in Mr. Fitch's opinion, "spying since the war has become almost a dead letter." Thinking the matter well over, I should say that spying is rapidly going the way of bows and arrows.

"Traitors Within" is the record of an exceptionally eventful and interesting career. But most of it is written between the lines—in invisible ink perhaps. —Reuter.

HOW TO WRITE A
THRILLERFinding Where Murder Fits In.

FAMOUS NOVELLIST'S ADVICE

London. Just how to write a thriller was described by an expert—Mr. Freeman Wills Croft—in an address to the fellowship of Literature.

The Method of the Murder—that is the very heart of the book, he said. Then the writer must select the motive, usually hatred, love, greed or fear.

If one followed the murdered man through the day, explained Mr. Crofts brightly, one would find a time and place in which he could be murdered. The murderer could then be fixed up as one chose and the murderer "fitted in."

Great care must be exercised in building up the synopsis with its facts, scenes, chronology, personalities, suspects and other details.

Once he wrote a detective story that depended on the sinking of a crate, he confessed. A reader pointed out to him that the crate would not have sunk at all! —Reuter.

"BURKE'S LANDED GENTRY."

The last complete edition of "Burke's Landed Gentry" appeared in 1921.

It is significant that the new edition, now in course of preparation, will contain a special section for families who were formerly classified as "landed" but who have now parted with their estates.

The China Mail

Hong Kong, Monday, June 12, 1933.

Central Australia.

An expedition, organised by Mr. Donald Mackay, has recently left Sydney in order to make an aerial reconnaissance of the little-known region where the Northern Territory marches with Western Australia. Mr. Mackay's previous expedition in 1930 filled in many empty places in the map and corrected many errors. It found permanent water where none was reported to exist; it also found that many topographical features were quite wrongly located and that several landmarks upon which the wayfarer might rely for guidance were delusions. On this occasion the operations of Mr. Mackay's party are to be even more extensive. The main base will be at the north end of the Peterman Range, 400 miles west of Alice Springs, and commanding a radius of 300 miles by aeroplane flights. Subsidiary bases will be established at the Fitzroy crossing in the Kimberley district and at the Roy Hills station on the Fortescue River, another 400 miles to the south. In this triangle there are practically no white inhabitants. At intervals a drover passes along the Canning stock route, a police-trooper investigates a crime, or an enterprising prospector—as did the ill-fated Lasseter—ventures into untrodden fastnesses. These immense and lonely distances almost baffle the imagination of the city-dweller, to whom a journey of 300 miles in a comfortable train is something of an undertaking. "Read large scale maps," said Lord Salisbury to a critic. The advice is very necessary in the case of Australia. Mr. Mackay's valuable contributions to the process of unveiling the secrets of Central Australia have been rendered practicable by the employment of aircraft, an agency which has revolutionised the whole technique of exploration. Aeroplanes have soared over Mount Everest while ground parties, often defeated, laboriously essayed the summit. They have winged their course to either pole and back again in hours fewer than the months that were formerly needed to attain the objective. The American aerial survey has reported that in Alaska, amidst the tangle of mountains and wastes of tundra, are rich sunken valleys. In Australia aeroplanes have inaugurated a new era in discovery, which has five phases. Governor Phillip trudged painfully by ridge and gorge to spy out his demesne. Later, horses were useful in country which was not too rough and which afforded natural sustenance. In Central Australia these conditions were not satisfied, neither were the appetites of the horses. Camels offered a solution, and, although Sir Thomas Elder was not the first to introduce them, to him must be given the credit of their successful acclimatisation and breeding. To the camel, a haughty, petulant, and unlikely beast, Australia owes the construction of the north-south transcontinental telegraph line and the opening of the arid interior. But in the fullness of days the camel was outstripped and outladen by the motor lorry, which will perform tasks unthinkable to those accustomed to drive upon made roads. Now the aeroplane, with its speed and range, supplements the motor vehicle. It is improbable that for some time aircraft will supersede other means of locomotion and transport, nor will they relieve the cartographer from terrestrial exertions. The most skilled observer cannot, from the air, make an accurate survey without the aid of the camera. For ordinary purposes, apart from aerial surveys, the aviator can take illuminating photographs showing the bird's-eye view, and for purposes of reconnaissance aircraft are unrivalled. Mr. Mackay's team will have ample scope for their investigations. We have adverted to the importance of consulting large scale maps. That of Central Australia shows a few lines indicating the tracks of explorers and stock routes. In between are vast, blank lacunae. The nomenclature, what there is of it, is not encouraging. Ophthalmia Range, Lake Disappointment, Patience Well, Separation Well, Rescue Well, were obviously named by pioneers who had experienced the rough edge of fortune. On the other hand Family Well, in the sector to be examined by Mr. Mackay's expedition, strikes a more reassuring note. Mr. Mackay believes that in reputation this country may have economic possibilities. This was also the impression of Mr. Michael Terry, who has twice traversed it recently. In the interests of a British company. There is no evidence that it will be an El Dorado—the difficulty of communications precludes that hope at present. But the gaps in the maps may conceal areas which would prove the general description of Central Australia as a "desert" to be unwarrantable.

Oberammergau's Passion Play

Next year the usual ten-year cycle is to be broken at Oberammergau, and the famous Passion Play, last seen in 1930, will be performed to commemorate the tercentenary of its first production in 1634.

The play was the outcome of a vow which the villagers took by way of thanksgiving for their escape from the terrible pestilence which ravaged the neighbouring country.

A remarkable addition will be made to next year's performances in the form of a new play specially written for the occasion of the tercentenary by Dr. Weissmantel. His play will depict the conditions prevailing in Oberammergau at the time of the pestilence and the circumstances which evoked the famous vow.

It is understood that the new play will be performed on the evening before the Passion Play. The Play itself is likely to be prefigured by a spoken prologue.

Allocation of Parts.

The plebiscite to settle the allocation of the parts will not be held until the autumn, but there is good reason to expect that Alois Lang will again be the Christus. It is also probable that Peter Rende will impersonate St. Peter, Hugo Rutz the character of Caiaphas, and Anton Lang, the former Christus, will again be Prologue.

A good many changes may be looked for in the least important roles. The solo singer of 1930 is considered likely to be chosen for Mary Magdalene.

Both the community at Oberammergau and the individual villagers have been seriously affected by recent events, but they have wisely decided to reduce the charges both for accommodations and for seats at the Play and these will probably be brought down to little more than half of the old prices.

Your Daily Smile

SHE TRIED HARD

MISTRESS: Evelyn, you were entertaining a man in the kitchen last night, were you not?
MAID: That's not for me to say, ma'am, but I did my best.

CAUGHT

JERRY: You used to boast that your love for peppy girls was just a passing fancy. And yet you got married.

JIM: Yes, I lingered too long in passing the last one.

TAKING THE AIR

"Hello, what are you doing walking around this time of the night?"
"I'm just taking the air."
"Doctor's orders?"
"No—girl's."

CHANGE CARS!

The driver of a dilapidated car asked a bystander: "Can you tell me the quickest way to Victoria?" After a critical glance at the car, the bystander replied: "Yes, take a bus."

STRANGER

SHE: You are an incorrigible flirt. To-day I saw you with a woman I have never seen you with before.
HE: That must have been my wife.

WILLING TO TRY IT

A London business man had an old automobile, which he could not get rid of at any price. At last he decided to sell it himself, and hung up the following notice: "Who will take this car for $25?" Next day a man came in and said: "I believe there's a catch in this somewhere, but bring out the car and the $25."

AMERICA WAKES UP
TO HER CRISISDESIRE FOR RADICAL
REORGANISATION

NO FAITH IN OLD BELIEFS

(By The Hon. Harold Nicolson.)

The Hon. Mr. Harold Nicolson, C.M.G., the well-known author and critic, has just returned to England from a three and a half months' visit to the United States, and in a series of articles, has given his impressions of the country at a time of acute economic, financial and political crisis.

Mr. Nicolson is the third son of the first Lord Carnock, and was formerly in the Diplomatic Service. His writings, other than literary criticism and biography, include "Some People," a book of brilliantly penetrating and amusing studies of well-known people, published in 1927.

What were the pre-conceptions which I had formed regarding the United States before ever I set foot on Brooklyn pier? I imagined a vast, varied and infinitely productive continent divided into four main areas.

I supposed that the Atlantic seaboard was mainly Anglo-Saxon and industrial; that the Middle West was mainly agricultural and strongly conservative; that the South was sedentary, sulky and self-contained. The Pacific Coast I supposed to be little more than a playground for the more prosperous elements from the other three regions. I imagined also that the whole continent was inhabited by a population which, although of mixed origin, was amazingly uniform in sturdiness, thought and manner.

"The American Idea."

I assumed that all these heterogeneous elements had been unified and inspired by "The American Idea," and defined that idea as a faith in the perfectibility of the common man, as a belief in equality of easy opportunity, and as a conviction that the United States could furnish an unlimited supply of that opportunity, and thus provide at once an asylum and a conservatory in which the lowest types of humanity could be stimulated, as now—else, to achieve their perfected development.

I took it for granted that the whole nation was widely and sincerely convinced of the validity of this "American Idea," and was willing to sacrifice to it many of the gentler amenities of mind and soul. I assumed also that from the American Idea had emerged the American System.

and that I should find on arrival an economic confidence and a standard of living infinitely superior to that which is maintained in the older world. I believed that the economic and social organisation of the Republic, being based upon "rugged individualism" and limitless opportunity, offered such rich and speedy prizes to the thrifty and the ingenious, so many pathways of escape from proletarian status, that no permanent class-consciousness could exist among the industrial population. I assumed that, in abolishing class distinction, America had also abolished class animosity.

What One Expects.

I expected to find wide indifference to, and almost complete ignorance of, conditions in Europe and in the East. I expected to find a thin but showy coating of culture with a thirst for education, even as I took for granted that the national manner would be brisk, bracing, superficial, and at moments noisy.

And I supposed that, in spite of many flaws in the structure of federal government, in spite of marked deficiencies in States administration, in spite of widespread corruption and incompetence in municipal politics, yet the main principles of democracy (however transmuted since the days of Jefferson, however emotionalised since those of Lincoln) did in fact represent the active faith of the whole people, and did in fact constitute a visible and continuous standard of national purpose.

Such were my main assumptions when I embarked last December upon a voyage of observation. How far have these assumptions been modified by actual experience, and how far have they been confirmed?

Modern Americans.

I do not now regard the United States as a uniform area divided into only four regions. I regard America as a richly diversified area, sundered by cleavages of geography, climate, race, economics and politics, as centrifugal in instinct as the old Hapsburg Empire. I do not now believe in the validity of the former distinctions between East, South, Middle West, and West. New England is rapidly ceasing to be Anglo-Saxon; Massachusetts has moved into Iowa; the South is moving northwards; the Middle West is becoming sophisticated; the West is evolving a civilisation of its own. It did not seem to me that Americanism was as deep a force as I had previously supposed, or that the melting-pot melted with the rapidity or completeness which I had imagined.

There is little sturdiness in the sickly complexions, the fretted nerves, of modern Americans. Still less have they evolved a coherent national mind, although they have certainly adopted a "compelling uniformity of manner."

More importantly, I derived the impression that the American Idea had somehow lost its former validity, and that the American System was being subjected to intense and widespread criticism, and even transformation. I felt that for the thinking part of the population the Idea has become a source of disillusion, almost of self-reproach; for the unthinking portion (and they are numerous) the Idea is little more than a deliberate form of belief.

Changed Beliefs.

I did not, therefore, derive the impression that in this April of 1933 many Americans possess any living faith in such old watchwords as "rugged individualism," "our manifest destiny," or "the land of promise." Individualism has resulted all too widely in corruption and incompetence; the destiny of the United States is to-day anything but manifest; it is questionable whether any promises can be performed; opportunity, above all, has ceased to be either easy or limitless.

I question whether in such circumstances the proletariat can much longer be lulled into quiescence by the old prospects of rapid self-advancement, or fall to evolve the class-consciousness entailed by lasting labour depression. I am doubtful, also, whether a high standard of living (interpreted all too frequently in terms of celophane, bath-rooms, and motor-cars) can, in fact, be any substitute for knowing how to live; nor was I convinced that America has yet discovered how to adjust the individual to society, how to combine the duty towards one's neighbour with the duty towards oneself.

MUMMIES ARE OUT OF DATE.British Museum Has Surplus Stock.

London.
Fifty years ago the cry of almost every visitor who came into the British Museum was "Show us the way to the mummies!"

To satisfy the public's passionate interest in Egyptology, the museum acquired and was presented with mummies on a wholesale scale. They were lined up in the corridors and crowded into a number of rooms.

Now the visitors' interest in them having worn off, the museum would like to get rid of about half their supply. It is proposed to leave a few of them on view and put the rest in two locked-rooms, available to students who insisted on studying large quantities.

The First Commissioner of Works recently started London when he said that the girders supporting the floors of the British Museum were "no longer to be trusted." But the officials of the building have replied that there were always serious flaws in the girders—due to faulty casting. They are just as bad to-day as they were 110 years ago when the building was erected—but no worse.—Reuter.

FIRECRACKER FIRMS IN COURT

74 Cases Seized In Harbour.

INFRINGEMENT OF TRADE- MARK ALLEGED

A summons for an alleged infringement of a trade mark of firecrackers in 740 cases, consigned by the Wah Keung Firm of Macao to Colombo and Africa by Mr. Cheung Tak, managing partner of the Him Lung, complainant firm, was heard before Mr. Wynne-Jones at the Central Magistracy this morning.

Mr. Hin-shing Lo, (instructed by Mr. J. M. Hall, of Lyson and Hall) appeared for the defendant firm, while Mr. D. L. Strellett appeared in place of Mr. G. K. Hall Brutton, (who is indisposed), for the prosecution.

Counsel for the defendant firm said he was appearing in an extraordinary case, in which a person or persons (names unknown) trading as the Wah Keung Firm, on June 5 at Victoria Harbour, had in his or their possession, with a view to sale, a consignment of firecrackers of which a mark, No. 141 of 1910, registered in Class 10 in respect of Firecrackers, was falsely applied to and calculated to deceive.

His Worship explained that the summons, was served on Mr. Chan Ming Sing of the Yik Hing firm of Importers and Exporters, who were representatives of the Firecracker firm in Macao.

This was done on an application by Mr. Loseby, for a warrant of search of firecrackers on board the s.s. Kidderpore.

Mr. Hin-shing Lo said the consignment, which was valued at about $10,000, was consigned by the defendant firm to a port in India and to Africa, and on its way to the consignees, was seized in Victoria Harbour on a warrant issued by His Worship. The defendant firm are claiming the cargo and are pleading not guilty to the summons.

Mr. Strellett for the claimant firm, said, he was appearing in place of Mr. Brutton who was indisposed.

Counsel had intended asking His Worship for a week's adjournment in order to make the various inquiries relating to the responsibilities attached to the persons connected with the firecrackers.

Counsel pointed out that it was a very complicated case and he would like to get everything ready before continuing with the case.

Evidence of serving the summons was given by Det. Sub-inspector Bright, who said that on June 5 at 6.30 p.m., he went to 232, Des Vaux Road West, to serve a summons on Chang Ming Sing.

The person in question was not present at the time but later received and accepted the summons.

Sub-inspector Bright also gave evidence of seizure of the cargo. On June 5 at 12.45 p.m. accompanied by a Chinese detective, he proceeded to Lighter No. 4, lying at the Sai-kung Wharf, and there seized 740 cases of firecrackers by virtue of a warrant issued by His Worship.

The hearing was adjourned to Monday, June 19 at 11.30 a.m.

GAMING HOUSE. CONVICTION.

$1,200 Fines Imposed
In Police Court.

Yeung Choi, a 54 year old glass maker, was this morning convicted on charges of possession, of 4,490 Macao Po-piu lottery tickets, and keeping a gaming house, by Mr. Wynne-Jones at the Central Magistracy.

A Chinese girl, Li Wun-chi, who was alleged to have been the carrier for the accused, was discharged.

The accused was arrested in a cubicle at a house in Lower Lascar Road. The drawing for the lottery should have taken place this afternoon.

Evidence of tenancy was proved and His Worship fined the accused $1,000 or in default five months' hard labour on the first charge of possession, and $200 or in default one month's hard labour on the second charge of keeping a gaming house.

FEW EMIGRANTS FOR UNITED STATES

MAGPIE WIRELESS FAN.

Hoard Of Radio Spares
Found In Nest.

Vienna.

This is a story of a modern Jackdaw of Rheims—A Magpie that was a wireless "fan".

For some weeks wireless enthusiasts of Tirnau, Austria, had been in despair because portions of their sets always seemed to be missing.

Then one of them saw a magpie leaving an open window in his house. In the magpie's beak was a shining portion of his wireless set.

The magpie's nest was traced. It was found to contain enough radio spare parts to build several sets. When the stolen goods were retrieved, the magpie fought with his beak to defend the property.—Reuter.

INDIAN TROOPS FAREWELLED.

70 Soldiers Return
To Calcutta.

A contingent of 70 Indian soldiers from the Jat Regiment, Mule Corps and H.K. and S. Brigade, R.A., left for Calcutta on the s.s. Tilawa, on Saturday morning.

A large crowd of Indian troops gathered at the Star Ferry wharf to give them a send-off as they left for the liner, and in accordance with the old Indian custom the departing soldiers wore bright flowered laurels around their necks.

Four Indian officers left with the draft, including Subadar-Major Shah Zaman Khan, who holds the King's commission of Honorary hero.

MOON GODDESS'S TEMPLE FOUND

2,300 B.C. Discoveries
In Iraq.

IMPORTANCE OF FIND

London.

In the twenty-third century B.C., King Ur-Engur of Ur of the Chaldees (in Iraq), sank a well which was kept under repair by his successors down to the sixth century B.C.

Now, undisturbed in the masonry, have been found clay tablets on which one of these ancient rulers claims credit for his work of restoration.

These are among the latest discoveries of the Joint Expedition at Ur of the British Museum and the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. C. Leonard Wooley, the director of the Joint Expedition, in his latest report, states that the work done recently gave results, which, for the proper understanding of the site, are among the most important yet secured.

"One of the great difficulties has always been the Temenos or Sacred Area," Mr. Wooley continues. "Here were grouped together the temples and other religious buildings dedicated to the Moon god and his consort, and in the latter days of the city's life they were enclosed by a huge wall erected by Nebuchadnezzar. But no vestige of any wall so strong as to be more military than religious in character. The vicissitudes of the defences can be traced all through subsequent history, as they were breached or overthrown by enemies, patched or reconstructed by successive kings."

"The discovery is not unexpected but it is new, and affords a picture of the old city for which there was no evidence before. In the west corner of the Temenos rose the higher terrace on which stood the Ziggurat tower, and here we have completed the excavation of the buildings which surrounded an earlier Ziggurat than that which exists to-day. Underneath the vast mass of brickwork dating from 2,300 B.C. lies another tower some seven centuries older, and it is the dependencies of that buried Ziggurat which have now been unearthed."

"A row of small shrines faced the tower. Behind them was a large temple, probably dedicated to the Moon goddess, in the central chambers of which was prepared the food of Nin-Gal herself and of the deities of her retinue. The tradition of her worship on this seems to have endured throughout all later times until the destruction of Ur. Most of the buildings dating between 3,000 B.C. and 1,400 B.C. have been ruthlessly destroyed, but enough remains to prove that they did exist."

"The most striking of the ruins is a deep brick-lined well first sunk by King Ur-Engur in the twenty-third century B.C. and repaired by later rulers down to the time of Nabonidus in the sixth-century B.C. We found undisturbed in the masonry the eight clay tablets, whereon one of these later rulers claims credit for his pious work of restoration."—Reuter.

To-Day's Short Story.

17.45

By A. J.
Alan.

THE place we go to every year for our summer holiday is called Littlebury-on-Sea. It's about 17 miles from Plymouth.

It isn't exactly a village but just a collection of forty or fifty bungalows dotted about on the edge of the cliff.

There's a shop, of course, which is also the post office, and opening out of the post office there's a highly efficient telephone exchange—six feet by three.

As you can imagine, one rather leads the simple life down there, and no one, at least no one who is anyone, wears anything but rag. A man certainly once did appear in decent clothes, but his body was found floating some days afterwards.

We even occasionally take in each other's washing—not in the usually accepted sense—but what I mean is that if you see the paper man trying to deliver a suspicious-looking bundle next door, when you know they're out, you harbour it till they come in.

That's the sort of place it is and no ceremony to speak of is stood on.

Anyway, we've taken a bungalow there for a great many years.

As a general rule, the day after we get down and the unpacking's finished, my wife and I make a little tour of inspection. We go first of all and pay our respects to Mr. and Mrs. Jupp at the post office, and then we stroll round to see what's been altered or built since the summer before.

Well, we did that this year, and after we'd thoroughly inspected Littlebury-on-Sea we wandered along the cliff and down into the next cove which is called Fallaborough. There bungalows there, too, and we found a brand-new one, standing rather by itself. It was all painted white and evidently only just finished. We walked round outside the fence and admired it, and as we were walking round and admiring it we both noticed that the telephone bell was ringing, and it went on and on.

My wife, who's an extremely tidy woman, said: "I wish they'd answer their telephone." But no one did, and we finally came to the conclusion that everyone was out. That being so, it seemed a bit callous to go away and let poor Miss Links, up at the exchange, go on ringing, so I said: "I shall go in and tell her that there's no one at home." Which I proceeded to do.

NEW CHURCH OF ST. ANTHONY

Foundation Stone
To Be Laid.

TO-MORROW'S CEREMONY

The foundation stone of the new Catholic Church of St. Anthony will be laid and blessed by Bishop Valorta to-morrow afternoon.

The site of the new Church is on the slope below Pokfulm Road and adjoins the St. Louis Industrial School.

The occasion will be marked by a fitting celebration, and a Procession in which all the Catholic clergy will participate. In addition to Solemn High Mass at 7 a.m., the religious rites will include Solemn Vespers at 4.15 p.m., followed by a sermon and Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Souvenir tickets have been distributed to the various supporters and friends of the Salesian Society, who will have charge of the new Church when completed. These tickets are available at a nominal cost of 25 cents and the souvenirs will be distributed for the three days following.

A cordial invitation is extended to all the Catholic community and friends, and arrangements have been made with the Bus Company for the conveyance of visitors to the spot by both the Nos. 3 and 4 routes.

POLICE MUST LEARN TO DRIVE

Prague. Policemen and magistrates in Czechoslovakia must learn to drive a motor-car. They will be given special lessons in order that they may have an understanding of the difficulties of a motorist by becoming one themselves.

The order has been adopted following the suggestion of a motor club.—Reuter.

I walked up the garden path and in at the front door. It was wide open—people don't shut their front doors down there—and it led straight into a big living-room. I looked round for the telephone and eventually found it on a writing-table tucked away in a sort of alcove. It was a pretty room, rather irregular in shape.

This writing-table had the usual things on it, inkstand, calendar, clock, and so on, and in the pen-tray there were some pencils. The clock was right and the pencils were properly sharpened, so I imagined it to be a man's writing-table. I took off the telephone receiver and heard a confused sort of noise going on, which meant I was on to a trunk line and not just the local exchange.

I said "Hullo" at intervals, and while I waited I picked up one of the pencils and made a note of the time. I always use the twenty-four hours time, for things of that kind, so as it was exactly a quarter to six I wrote down the figures 17.45 on the top left-hand corner of the clean white blotting-pad which was on the table.

Well, I went on saying "Hullo"

TO-MORROW'S STORY.

To-morrow's story will be "For The Sake of Enlightenment," by Countess Brisbane.

and getting no answer, when suddenly a woman's voice cut in. It struck me that she was rather agitated. She said: "Is that the White Bungalow?" I said: "It's certainly a white bungalow and quite possibly the White Bungalow, but there's no one in, and I'm only just answering the telephone."

Then she said: "Are you at Fallaborough?" (Still more agitated.) And I told her I was, and then she said: "Will you go up at once to the Coastguard Station and tell them there's been an accident. A little girl has fallen off the Chair Rock and is lying unconscious just below it. The tide's coming in and if they aren't quick she'll be drowned."

I said "Right" and slammed the receiver on and ran out to my wife, who was still standing by the garden gate, and I told her what the situation was. By the way, I think I ought to explain a little bit what the coast beyond Fallaborough is like. It's very wild indeed and people only go along there for prawning. The cliffs are over two hundred feet high and the beach is merely a mass of big rocks. This beach is rather divided off into sections by buttresses of cliff which stick out. You can get past them till about three-quarter tide, and then you can't. The Chair Rock, which I knew quite well, where the accident had happened, was at the end of the first section from Fallaborough Cove, where we were.

We had a look at the tide and saw that it wasn't quite up to the foot of the first buttress, and there was still just time to get round, so we decided that the best thing to do was for me to go straight for the place along the beach, while she, my wife that is, went back into Fallaborough Village and collected some coastguards and ropes and things. They would have to follow along the top of the cliffs.

At all events, I scrambled along for something like half a mile over slimy boulders and in and out of pools, and finally got to this Chair Rock.

At the foot of it there's a large, flat slab, and on its was lying the daintiest little maiden you ever saw. She was as pretty as a picture, in spite of the fact, that she had a bump on her forehead the size of a golf ball. I reckoned she must have taken a toss from at least fifteen feet up. She was completely unconscious, anyway.

It was a good thing I'd hurried because the waves were beginning to wash over her. I picked her up as carefully as I could and waded ashore. There was a convenient patch of shingle at high-water mark and I deposited her on that.

I hunted for broken bones and further damage and couldn't find any, so it wasn't a very serious accident after all, but it easily might have been. What I mean is—supposing you're only stunned. If you're drowned before you recover you're just as dead as if you'd been killed. Another few minutes and she'd have been an angel. However, she wasn't.

LINGNAM

S. CHINA

Champion's Fortunate To Draw.

LAM'S FINE PITCHING

(By THE KID)

The Lingnam University squad caused a sensation yesterday when they drew with the South China outfit at Caroline Hill. The score was 4-4.

The students played high class baseball to hold the champions to one run throughout the first eight innings, and but for the heavy downpour during the latter half of the South China ninth inning, the students would probably have won the game.

It was a pitcher's duel, Kau and Lam for the Lingnam team and E. Chang for the Southerners. Lam was pitching beautifully until the heavy downpour, the wet and heavy ball taking away the speed and curves in his delivery. Ed. Chang on the other hand held the students in check until the first of the ninth, until which the students were able to score but one run.

The first of the ninth brought in three big markers for the students, and when the side was retired, the heavy downpour came to save the Southerners from defeat.

South China were the first to score, pushing one run across in the second inning. Matty Chang walked, stole second and third. Tommy Chan fanned the air three times for the first out. H. Young squeezed Matty in with a nice executed play. Ed. Chang fled out to end the inning.

Lingnam Come On Terms.

Both sides were held in check to the seventh inning. Lingnam tied the count in this inning, Ng hit the ball for a two-base clout, and later scored when Tommy Kim threw wild over first base on Lum's grounder.

In the ninth inning the Lingnam boys found Ed. Chang's deliveries for three runs and one hit. Joe Yee, first man on, singled, Ng went out via the strikeout route, Ken Lee drew a walk, and Ray Ching, the next batter, slammed the ball into right field for a single scoring both runners ahead.

On the same play Tommy Chan in trying to nab Ken Lee at third, threw the ball way in to the crowd and Ray Ching scored from second.

Ed Chang's Equalizing Effort.

The Southerners had the break when they came in to bat after a heavy downpour had halted the game for a quarter of an hour; the field was a pond of water. The Lingnam side, however, insisted on playing off the extra half of the inning. B. Chang hit safely, Tommy Kim fled out to left-field for the first out. M. Chang was (Continued at foot of next column)

AMERICA WAKES UP TO HER CRISIS

I felt, however, that in the face of her present danger, she might with her native adventurousness, embark excitedly upon this very voyage of discovery. I found, moreover, a greater interest in, and a far greater knowledge of, world conditions than I had been led to suppose, and I was impressed by the fact that the standard of culture, though seldom rising to the isolated depths or altitudes which we attain in Europe, was wider, higher, and more solid than the same standard in England.

The American manner, also, has suffered a post-depression change, and the old brisk self-assurance has given place to something quieter, more uncertain, and infinitely more attractive.

Politicians Disliked.

Above all, I was struck by the readiness with which the American people have abandoned all extreme belief in what we, in Europe have for so long regarded as democratic principles.

The discredit into which Congress, and in fact the whole representative system, has fallen is one of the most significant symptoms of post-depression America.

Central Government has always been distrusted in America, but the former indifference of the average American in regard to the profession of politics is rapidly changing into active, and almost combative, dislike. The general impression that this left upon the British observer is that the United States are passing through a phase of rapid, obscure, but deeply important transition.

It is something more than their traditional mobility; something far deeper than temporary economic adjustment; something stronger than that fluidity which has been so constantly apparent in their history—it is a general and perfectly determined mood of expectancy; a very wide and definite desire, not so much for some radical change as for some radical reorganisation.

The destiny of America may not for the moment be very manifest, but it is certainly assured. Moreover, the extreme versions of the American Idea had long since lost all close relation to fact. A new idea, equally inspiring, less fraudulent, and far more cohesive, will assuredly be evolved.

Human Equality.

Nor is this all. The Idea, however great its fallacy, has certainly endowed every American with a conception of human equality which he still believes in, still practices, and will certainly maintain. However incomplete, ill-considered, and occasionally irritating, this egalitarianism may be, yet it does in fact constitute a stable, continuous, and productive element in their theory. I am convinced also that the American people possess certain qualities of heart and mind (their generosity, their inventiveness) to a degree greater than they are possessed by the nations of Europe. And I believe that the progressive development and fusion of such qualities will in the end prove to be that unifying and creative element which should enable the United States to take their rightful place as leaders of the world.

Soon after I'd put her down she opened her eyes and tried to sit up. She didn't say: "Where am I?" or anything like that—she simply asked: "What have you done with my prawns?" I said: "I haven't seen your prawns, and in any case they don't matter a—well, they don't matter." And I adjured her to lie down and not fuss. But oh, no, that wouldn't do. She wanted her prawns there and then. She'd gone out specially to get them for her daddy's supper, and nothing would satisfy her but the immediate production of these—or—beasts. She told me exactly what they were like. They were in a tin, apparently, and three in number, and one of them had longer whiskers than the other two. I said: "Never mind about their whiskers—I shall know them by their tin," and I promised that if she'd stop quite still I'd go back to the rock and have a good look.

She gave me her word not to move, and I waded forth into the breakers on what looked like a perfectly hopeless quest, but, and I know you won't believe me, I found this tin bobbing up and down about twenty yards out. Yes. The only thing was that its three somewhat listless occupants were shrimps and not prawns, though I wouldn't have told her so for all the world. At the age of six one's shrimps are apt to be prawns.

Just then there were loud cries from the top of the cliff, and presently a coastguard came slithering down in a boatwain's chair on the end of a rope.

We conferred and then we tied the young woman into this boatwain's chair and sent her up first, complete with courtesy prawns, and she howled with glee all the way. Then I went and finally the coastguard.

At the top I found my wife and four more coastguards. The distressed heroine was beginning to feel a little sick, so as they'd brought a stretcher, we thought it safer to put her on it and keep her there until the doctor had seen her. Actually, I wasn't allowed to take part in the triumphal procession. My wife told me that I was sopping wet and must run on home and change—which I did.

However, when she got back to our bungalow about an hour later she said the patient was doing well. They'd first of all taken her to the Coastguard Station where she'd been overhauled by the doctor. He said that bar the crack on the head and a certain amount of shock, she hadn't come to any harm. They were going to take her home after she'd had a bit of a rest.

Then my wife said: "It's rather funny about where she lives," and I said: "Why is it funny about where she lives?" and she said: "Well, she comes from that white bungalow where you answered the telephone."

I agreed that it was a bit of a coincidence, although really, when one came to think of it, she'd got to live somewhere, and there was no earthly reason why it shouldn't have been there just as well as anywhere else.

It wasn't even strange about the message or our not knowing who'd sent it. If it was anyone walking along the cliff from the other direction, who'd spotted the girl from above, the first thing that would occur to them would be to run back the way they'd come, to give the alarm, and that would account for our not having come across them. We didn't worry our heads any more about it, but after dinner, when we were out for another stroll, we thought it would be rather polite to go down and inquire after the patient, so we did.

The parents were in by this time, quite nice people, and they told us that Susan was in bed and asleep, and developing a lovely black eye, but otherwise going on quite well. Then the mother said: "Are you by any chance the good Samaritans who rescued her?"

We hastily assured her that there hadn't been anything in the nature of rescue work. It had merely been a question of removing their daughter a little further up the beach out of harm's way. As I pointed out, one would have done the same for any towel one had found too near the edge, and she was worth quite a lot of towels. However, they insisted on being embarrassingly grateful, and then the mother turned to her husband and said: "Shall we tell them, George?" He said: "You can if you like, but they won't believe you," and then she told us quite an astonishing story.

That afternoon she and her husband band had motored into Plymouth. They'd done some shopping and got their hair cut, and then they'd gone and called on the architect who'd designed their bungalow. I forget exactly what it was about—something to do with the hot water, I think. Actually, she didn't go in. George went in, and she sat and waited in the car—and while she waited she fell asleep and dreamed a dream. Nothing in that, of course, and it has been done before, but this was a very peculiar dream indeed, as it turned out.

She dreamt that she was on the top of the cliff immediately above the Chair Rock. She looked down and saw Susan spread out on the stone just below it, in fact she described most accurately how she was lying when I found her, with the tide coming in and all the rest of it. There she was, unable to get down or do anything to help, and yet all the time she knew herself to be miles away in Plymouth. She felt that if only she could get to a telephone, something might be done, but, of course, she couldn't move hand or foot, like you often can't in dreams. It must have been very terrible for her.

The idea of wanting to telephone was so strong that when George came out and woke her she wanted him to go back into the office again and ring up the coastguards at Fallaborough to see if everything was all right. He naturally wouldn't and rather laughed at her, but he tried to drive home faster than he usually did. Unfortunately they had engine trouble on the way and took nearly two hours to get back, otherwise my wife would have seen them.

At all events, she, the mother, finished up by saying: "It seems like a direct intervention of Providence: that you were walking along the beach at the time." So I said: "But I wasn't walking along the beach. I got a telephone message telling me exactly where to go to, otherwise I shouldn't have been within half a mile of the place." Of course, it was the first they'd heard of this—and the husband was frightfully keen to know who'd telephoned and where I was when I'd got the message. So I told him, I said: "I was here outside your own gate, and heard the bell ringing, and as no one seemed to be going the good lady, who'd spoken to me.

Then there was a dead silence,
and they both looked rather funny, and finally the man said: "Do you mean to tell me that you came in here and answered the telephone?"
I said: "Certainly, why not?" and he said: "Because we haven't got a telephone."
I said: "Oh, come—don't be silly
—I had it in my hand and spoke into it," and I got straight up and went over to the writing-table in the alcove, and there wasn't a sign of a telephone and never had been—and you can bet your sweet lives I looked—but on the corner of the blotting-pad, in my own handwriting, were the figures 17.45.

U.S. Silver Plan

BANK BACKING.

Before the United States went off the gold standard, the backing of the various kinds of paper money issued varied. The Federal Reserve Bank was required to keep a gold reserve of forty per cent. of its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation. Gold certificates were backed dollar for dollar by gold but National Bank notes had in the Treasury only five per cent. of lawful money behind them for final redemption. The redemption fund, however, was maintained constantly at the required level. United States notes, of which about $265,000,000 were in circulation, were backed by reserves of $156,000,000.

The delegates did not go into details of the effect of the proposed plan on the monetary system of the United States but it was indicated that there would be fewer kinds of money.

The understandings reached by President Roosevelt with the visiting statesmen did not mean that the plan had been adopted but that it was considered an acceptable basis for the discussions at London.—United Press.

PEAK TRAMWAY CONDUCTOR. Embezzlement Charge Remanded.

Pang Chee On, a former conductor of the Peak Tramway Co., appeared in the Central Magistracy this morning before Mr. Wynne-Jones, charged with the embezzlement of 40 cents from the Company, on June 9.

Mr. H. J. Armstrong who appeared for Mr. L. G. Scott, Superintendent of the Peak Tramways Company, said he understood the accused was being represented by counsel. He asked His Worship to fix a date for hearing.

The hearing was fixed for tomorrow morning, bail in the sum of $100 being granted.

DOLLAR RISES AS SILVER FALLS. Sharp Advance In Cross-Rates.

Spot and forward silver prices declined 1/4 on Saturday, closing at 19 5/16 and 19 3/4 respectively.

Michigan, succeeds Governor Murphy, as chief executive of America's fourth city for the remainder of the year. Mr. Couzens, years younger than Governor Murphy, who is barely 40, has been president of the common council.

Mr. Mills will exercise general oversight of affairs of the Manila railroad, the cement industry, sugar centrals and all other projects controlled by the insular government.

Has President's Approval.

He said President Roosevelt had approved the appointment, which represents a new departure in administration of the Philippines, as the insular government's economic affairs have always been decentralized with the Governor General in general charge.

As general manager of the Detroit street railways, which are municipality-owned and operated, Mr. Mills has been in charge of one of the largest enterprises of the country's fourth city.

The street car lines were taken over by the city more than a decade ago as the result of a campaign in which Mr. James Couzens, former partner of Mr. Henry Ford and now senator from Michigan, played a leading part. Mr. Couzens was the first commissioner of street railways and also police commissioner, before serving as mayor from 1919 to 1922.

London rate, jumped from £-G$4.11 1/2 on Friday to £-G$4.14 on Saturday.
